The Historical View

1. Chicago in 1837 was little more than a prairie village. It received its charter of incorporation two days after one was issued to Rush Medical College.

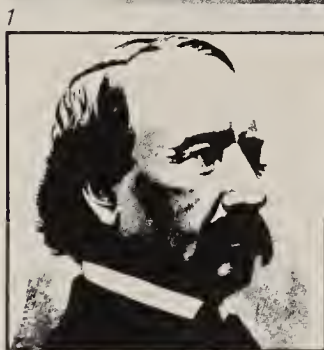

2. Daniel Brainard (1812-1866), founder of Rush Medical College, was known for his studies on rattlesnake venom, the treatment of wounds with iodine, and the treatment of ununited fractures.

3. The first permanent home of Rush Medical College was opened in 1844. It was located at the corner of Illinois and Dearborn Streets, an area opposite the present AMA headquarters.

4. James Van Zandt Blaney (1820-1874) opened the first free dispensary in Chicago in 1839. He is said to have discovered chloroform simultaneously with an English scientist. In civic affairs, he helped organize the Chicago Board of Education and the Chicago and Illinois Medical Societies.

5. The Great Chicago Fire of 1871 destroyed Rush Medical College. Shortly after the fire, students and faculty posed for a picture in the charred ruins of their school.

6. Just four days after the fire, the school was reborn in a "College under the sidewalk" opposite Cook County Hospital.

A critical shortage of practicing physicians in the United States led to the reactivation of Rush Medical College in 1971 after 29 years of suspended operations. Rebuilt in the tradition of the original school, the new Rush Medical College has as its goal the education of primary care physicians within the framework of private medical practice.

Today Rush Medical College is located at Chicago's Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center on a site occupied by the original school for 67 years prior to its closing. The new Rush Medical College is the major educational facility in a health delivery system designed to care for 1.5 million people. Its students are trained within the patient care and laboratory facilities of the Center's Presbyterian-St. Luke's Hospital (an 825 bed, acute, general hospital), within a network of affiliated community hospitals, in outpatient and neighborhood health centers, and in the private practice offices of the College faculty.

At the time Rush Medical College was founded in 1837, the United States was facing a health care crisis. The rapidly expanding nation did not have enough qualified physicians to care for the needs of the people living on its western frontier. Doctors had to come from the established medical schools of the East coast to serve the pioneer families. When doctors were not available, the people relied upon patented medicines, hucksters, and traveling medicine shows to cure their ills.

In Illinois, Dr. Daniel Brainard received a charter to establish Rush Medical College on March 2, 1837, two days before the City of Chicago was incorporated. It was the first medical school in the State and it was established to train local residents in the finest traditions of medical practice. The school was named for Benjamin Rush, an American patriot, the only physician to sign the Declaration of Independence, and the man who has been called "the father of American medicine."

Soon after its opening Rush Medical College began to exert a strong influence on the treatment of the sick. It became a mark of distinction for the towns of Illinois, northwestern Indiana, and southwestern Wisconsin to boast that a "Rush" doctor practiced in their area.

Members of the Rush faculty performed the first operation West of the Allegheny Mountains in which chloroform and ether were used as an anesthetic.

It is claimed that James Van Zandt Blaney, a member of the first Rush faculty, discovered chloroform simultaneously with C.H.Y. Simpson of England. The first surgeon in Chicago to perform a vaginal hysterectomy and to explore the brain with an aspirating needle was Christian Fenger of the Rush faculty. He was also the first to demonstrate the ball valve action of stones in the common bile duct.

Nicholas Senn, a Rush surgeon, performed the first operations on gunshot wounds of the abdomen and the perforation of the intestines following trauma.

Studies conducted in the laboratories and clinics of the College included much original research which added to science's basic knowledge of the human body and its processes.

The theory that diseases can be contagious received early support from Graham N. Fitch, professor of obstetrics and women's and children's diseases. He later related instances of the transfer of disease through infected clothing.

James Nevins Hyde, member of an early Rush faculty, is credited with the first description of the influence of light as a causative factor in skin cancer and the first description of synovial lesions in the skin.

The career of James B. Herrick is marked by a long line of "firsts" including the description of sickle-cell anemia, description of coronary heart disease, demonstration of the pattern of coronary occlusion with an electrocardiogram, and in Chicago, the first use of diphtheria toxoid.

Willis J. Potts, a Rush graduate and faculty member, carried out studies preliminary to the development of the "blue baby" operation in Rush laboratories. The husband-and-wife faculty team of George and Gladys Dick developed methods of diagnosis and immunization against scarlet fever while at Rush.

Rush Medical College and its faculty were active in building many of Chicago's and the nation's leading medical institutions. In 1839, Dr. Blaney opened the first free dispensary West of the Allegheny Mountains. It became known as the Central Free Dispensary in 1857 and today is the Presbyterian-St. Luke's Hospital Health Center.

Nathan Smith Davis, a member of the first Rush faculty, was active in the organization of the American Medical Association in 1847 and has been called the "father" of that organization. (Since its founding six Rush graduates have served as president of the AMA including Nicholas Senn, John B. Murphy, Frank Billings, Arthur Dean Bevan, Ernest E. Irons, and Herman L. Kretschmer.)

In 1859, Dr. Davis helped found the Chicago Medical College, now known as the Northwestern University Medical School.

John Evans, a professor of obstetrics, secured a land grant for Northwestern University and served as its first chairman of the Board of Trustees.

The Rush faculty helped organize and staff the city's early hospitals including Chicago Hospital of the Lakes (now Mercy Hospital), the first U.S. Marine Hospital, the Chicago Eye and Ear Infirmary, the first Cook County Hospital, and Presbyterian Hospital (now Presbyterian-St. Luke's Hospital).

Rush Medical College graduated 10,976 physicians prior to 1942 when it suspended operations. During its 105 year history, Rush provided medical education through its affiliations with Lake Forest College, the University of Chicago and the University of Illinois.

The longest association was between 1898 and 1942 with the University of Chicago. Rush served as the first medical teaching facility of the University. In 1924, the College became an integral part of the University and provided undergraduate clinical training at the College's West Side campus.

The desire of the University to have its own medical school on the South Side and the wish of Rush to continue undergraduate training and service to the medically indigent on the West Side through Presbyterian Hospital led to an agreement to dissolve the relationship between the two institutions.

College facilities were returned to the Rush Trustees and leased by Presbyterian Hospital (now Presbyterian-St. Luke's Hospital), which had served as the affiliated teaching hospital for the College.

The Rush charter, name, ownership of buildings, and the power to appoint faculty were retained by the Rush Trustees although active undergraduate training was suspended.

In 1942, Presbyterian Hospital entered an agreement with the University of Illinois College of Medicine to teach undergraduate students. The staff of the hospital was given academic appointments on the faculty of the University's medical school. Certain faculty members were designated Rush professors.

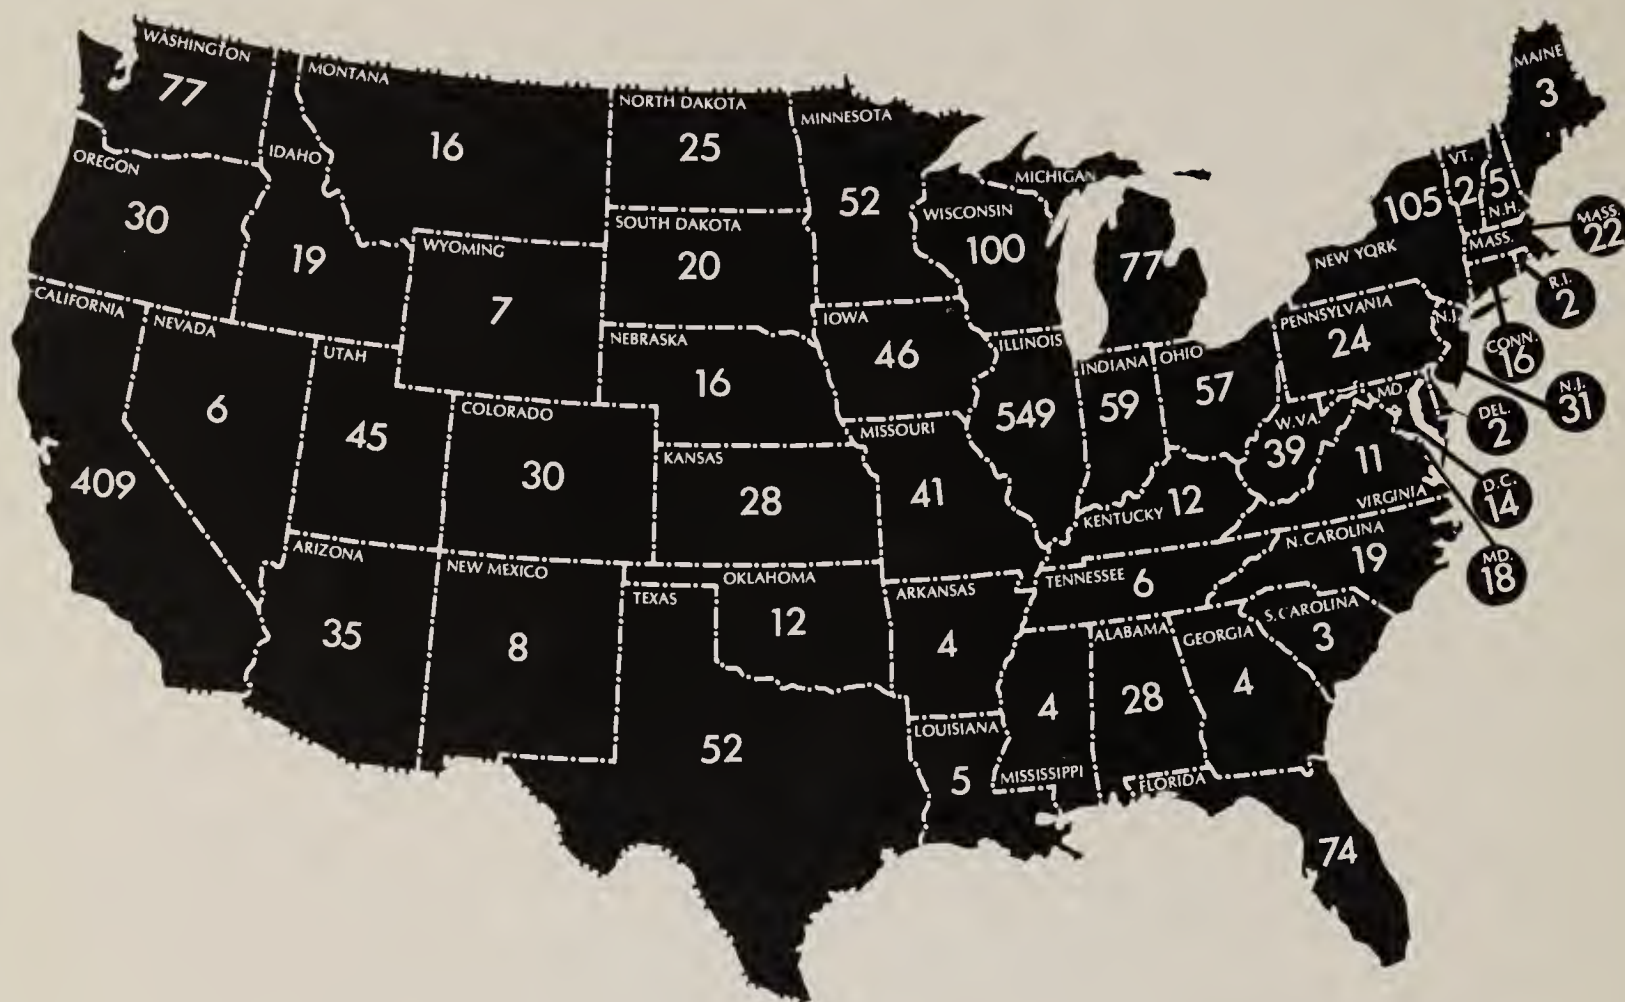

Looking forward to the time that Rush Medical College would resume its role in medical education, the College Board of Trustees continued to hold at least two meetings each year. They appointed a skeleton faculty every year, oversaw the care of College funds and properties, maintained the Rush Medical College Library and rare books collection, and made financial grants for medical education, research fellowships, and rewards for exceptional services by medical interns.

On October 24, 1969, the Trustees of Rush Medical College signed an agreement of merger with Presbyterian-St. Luke's Hospital forming a new corporation known as Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center. The new Medical Center was created to reactivate the Rush charter and re-establish the undergraduate medical education programs of Rush Medical College.

Overall view of Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center when completed in 1976.
